The Saloon a Poor Man's Club. Under the headline, "The Club," we find the following brief editorial in the Chicago "Record:"

"In a debate on the temperance question held in this city recently the speaker, who was defending the saloon, remarked: 'The saloon is the poor man's clubhouse. I don't say he ought to go there, but under our system he must go there.' True, the poor man who wants diversion has but little choice of places in which to seek it. Why does not the debater get up a movement to help the men of this class get their own clubrooms? With proper organization ought it not to be possible for drinking men to set up clubrooms with the money which now goes for beer and whisky? By the way, if not of the hickory sort, well laid on. the saloon is "the poor man's club," where does the poor man's wife go for her diversion?"

The closing sentence of the foregoing quotation presents a very good reason why a man should make his own as men are ever guilty of, to abandon the society of their waves and babies for that of boon companions amid the coarse environments of a barroom. Say nothing about the money squandered, that ought to be spent to better feed, clothe and educate the family, the practice of barroom loafing is a low and degrading habit, that respectable men, whether they drink much or little, should not acquire. It is ridiculous to talk about a poor man having "no place to go." He can take his wife for a call on a congenial neighbor. She may have such neighbors to call on her, and the two families may play games, discuss what they have read in the newspapers, and so on, all to their improvement. The saloon may be a necessity, but it is not a necessity as a "poor man's clubhouse." .- Chattanooga Times.

The above furnishes food for sober reflection, and is suggestive in more ways than one. It is only a short time since the same plea was set up for the saloon by a minister of New York City-i. e., that it is the "poor man's club," and that it was not fair to deprive the poor man of the privileges (1) which it affords while the rich man, lar "blessings."

There are several replies which may be made to this fallacious argument. One of them is noted in the clipping above. But it may be said, farther, that the poor man does not need a club, and the rich man would be better off if he did not have one. The homes of America furnish her strongest bulwarks; and it is scarcely necessary to call attention to the fact that club life is destructive of home life, generally speaking. The average "clubman" scarcely knows what his home looks like, spending almost none but his sleeping hours there. He takes but little, if any, of the responsibility of the training of his children, and seems to feel that if he furnishes sufficient money to feed, clothe and educate them he has done his entire duty in relation to them. His wife occasionally attends the theater with him and now and then has the felicity of having his honored presence at dinner (usually when there are guests); and when he gets sick he generally remains at home and growls at everybody and everything. As a not unexpected result this sort of life begets estrangement between father and children and husband and wife; and the divorce courts teem with scandals which are the outgrowth of this pernicious phase of city life. Homes are wrecked, hearts are filled with sorrow, lives are blighted, all because of club life.

Judged by the above tests, the saloon may truthfully be said to be the "poor man's club." It takes the husband and father away from his wife and little ones, causes him to neglect his duties to the household of which he is the (presumable) head, and, going farther than its prototype, even takes from the family the money necessary for their proper support, and sends the drunken devotee home. often to berate and abuse those who should look to him as their couniseer and protector. It is high time that the American people look this matter squarely in the face. If homes are to be worthy of the name, if sons and daughters are to become true men and women, if men are to do their whole duty, we must realize that it requires

"Two heads in counsel; two beside the hearth."

The names of home and mother are inseparably interwoven; and the relation of mother to child must ever remain the most sacred upon earth. But it must not be overlooked that there is also a most necessary relation between the home and the father as well. If the love and comfort of the motherheart are needed, so the prudence and strength of the father-head are required; and the counsel of the father is as much a part of the well regulated household as the tenderness of the mother. And so long as men neglect their homes, giving to the wives they have vowed to love and cherish less of their society than in the days of their courtship, they need not wonder if sometimes the desire for sympathy and companionship leads those wives into the path of wrong.

All of these evils are accompaniments of the club. All these abuses follow in the wake of a saloon. Truly the saloon is the poor man's club; but the question which suggests itself to any right minded observer in regard to the club patron, whether rich or poor, is if the sort of club needed most by him be
